What are your thoughts when you hear someone say, “I have good news and bad news.” Do you like to hear the bad news or good news first? I like to hear the bad news first so I will start with that. As I am writing to you, we are on the side of the road with a flat tire waiting on the rental car company to find a tow truck. The good news is that we are at least in one of the most beautiful spots in which to be broken down as we are traveling in the United Kingdom at the moment.

Since living in France, I have wanted to go across the channel to the UK and show Alyssa some of the places I was able to see and meet some of the friends I made while attending Crown UK. Now that we have a quick break between sessions of language school, we made the trip. It has been encouraging to visit many of the missionaries who had a big impact on my own missions journey and to see the growth of the ministry in the UK. It is also nice to give our brains a quick break as these past few months were filled with language learning.

We are thankful for your prayers as we continue to progress in the French language. We hope that you will continue to pray with us in that area. We would also greatly appreciate if you would pray for us as we prepare for our departure from France/arrival in Cote d’Ivoire. We will soon be applying for our visas and purchasing our plane tickets. Please pray for a smooth process with each.

It is both exciting and intimidating as we will make another big move to yet another continent. However, it is encouraging to know that we have you praying for us even in the little things such as finding a good price on plane tickets. Thank you for your investment in our family.

-Josh, Alyssa, and Adelynn Clay
